

The Sinclair Broadcast Group owns 62 television stations, spread across the country. It plans to force these stations to air, under the guise of a "documentary," a blatantly skewed anti-Kerry political advertisement within two weeks of the election.

This is an obvious attempt to sway the election in favor of George Bush, the pro-corporation, anti-regulation candidate. It is an outrageous breach of their obligation to serve the public interest, not their own, in return for the right to use the public airwaves. It is a subversion of the democratic process. And it is a clear illustration of why big corporations should not be permitted to own multiple media outlets.

Do your job. Stop them.
